For Duncan Wyllie Who suggest I write this in a comment he once made. Back in the 1800s in a large city in England there lived a seven year old and I will call him Tarn. His hair was matted with soot, his face and hands were black. His clothes were old and cast offs and didn't fit too well. His trousers had holes in the knees and the elbows of his shirt were gone. There were no luxuries that we enjoy today. Everyday you worked from dawn to dusk. He didn't smile or laugh, just scampered up and down chimneys to clean the soot away. On one fateful day he found himself wedged and couldn't move. No one heard his cries, or if they did, they just ignored them.
