Description:

Review Carol s book evolves into a page turner, not because of high drama but rather because we come to care for this little girl who is living a good, simple life that has evaporated. --Mary Kay Shanley, author, 'She Taught Me to Eat Artichokes' and 'The Memory Box'

Carol's book celebrates a unique and important time in the history of rural America. Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl is up on my bookshelf where I keep all the books I enjoy re-reading, and that is the highest compliment I can give it. -
-Mark Pearson, host of the Public Television show Market to Market and co-host of the Big Show on WHO Radio

If you have ever milked cows, made hay, wondered about Santa Claus, or had your dad shush you at the noon dinner table while the markets were on, you will identify with these situations. --Lee Kline, farm broadcaster, WHO Radio

About the Author Carol Bodensteiner was born (1948) in Maquoketa, Iowa, and raised on a family dairy farm in eastern Iowa. In her memoir Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl, Bodensteiner preserves in words for generations to follow this natural, deeply textured way of life that has been nearly lost in our country. After graduating from the University of Northern Iowa with a degree in speech and English education, Bodensteiner joined the American Soybean Association where she spent three years as editor of Soybean Digest magazine. Subsequently, Bodensteiner spent 23 years as public relations advisor to clients at two agencies. For 10 years, she was the president of CMF&Z Public Relations, one of the Midwest's largest business-to-business public relations firms. Since 1999, she has worked as an independent consultant. Currently she consults with agribusiness and higher education clients and teaches writing at Drake University. Bodensteiner has been a contributing author for various publications in her career, including Public Relations Review and Public Relations Quarterly. In addition to writing for professional journals, Carol has written essays published in The Iowan magazine and The Des Moines Register and aired on Public Radio.

Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl delivers a treat as delicious as oatmeal cookies hot out of the oven—a memoir of a happy childhood. In charming and memorable vignettes, Carol Bodensteiner captures rural life in middle America, in the middle of the 20th Century. Bodensteiner grew up on a family-owned dairy farm in the 1950s, a time when a family could make a good living on 180 acres. In these pages you can step back and relish a time simple but not easy, a time innocent yet challenging. If you grew up in rural America, these stories will trigger your memories and your se

Description: Growing Up Country is a fun and innocent childhood memoir about growing up in the 1950’s on an Iowa farm full of cows, chickens, Sunday dinners, and mischief. Each chapter is a single story or memory of growing up on the farm and learning family values, hard work, determination, respect, and discipline. Review: This memoir was everything I expected! It was an entertaining flashback of memories from "the good old days" with a genuine feel. Being a Wisconsin farm girl isn't that much different than being an Iowa farm girl. A lot of this book brought up fond memories of when I was younger. It was funny, it was sad, but it was really good. Born in Iowa and raised on her family's dairy farm, Carol grew up with a love of the land and an appreciation for family that form the foundation of her writing. A graduate of the University of Northern Iowa and Drake University, Carol built a successful career in public relations consulting before turning to creative writing. She is a regular participant in the University of Iowa Summer Writing Festival. Carol Bodensteiner, in sharing her memories in this charming memoir, Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl, has proven me wrong. So wrong in fact I was guilty of running to my husband and suggesting he remember a certain story about calving or planting or haying and then reading aloud to him Carol's story of similar experiences.

Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl delivers a treat as delicious as oatmeal cookies hot out of the oven - a memoir of a happy childhood. Bodensteiner grew up on a family-owned dairy farm in the 1950s, a time when a family could make a good living on 180 acres. In these pages you can step back and relish a time simple but not easy, a time innocent yet challenging. If you grew up in rural America, these stories will trigger your memories and your senses. This memoir of growing up on an Iowa farm (with two sisters and no brothers) in the 1950s is a treasure, especially since I also grew up on an Iowa farm (with one sister, no brothers) in the 1950s. Dad never wanted chickens around and didn't have dairy cows, so I learned a lot about the dailiness of dealing with both. My sister and I were also in 4-H, so I could relate to preparing demonstrations and projects to take to the county fair. A family working together like they did to keep a small farm running and economically viable is a disappearing way of life. 5.0 out of 5 stars Brings back great memories of growing up on the farm! It brought back so many good memories of helping on the farm and the freedom we enjoyed to explore. I gave it to my sisters and my 85 year old mother and everyone loved it.Â You see, I grew up a city girl in Nashville, TN, a far cry from Iowa or Washington. My memory banks hold no recollection of ever setting foot on a dairy farm during my childhood or even as an adult. To date, I have taken my acquired family's stories at face value, believing each farm would have its own unique set of stories with no semblance to another farm family's set of stories. Carol Bodensteiner, in sharing her memories in this charming memoir, Growing Up Country: Memories of an Iowa Farm Girl, has proven me wrong. Carol Bodensteiner. â€œI whispered in a conspiratorial tone to the kids crowded around the stove at the back of the schoolhouse. Just in from recess, we piled our snow-soaked mittens on the top of the stove to dry and held our chapped red fingers as close to the stove as we could. We could not tell at first whether our fingers were cold or hot; either way, they stung. â€œWhat are you talking about?â€€. Larry scoffed. â€œThere ainâ€™t no Santa Claus.â€€. Larry rubbed his palms together and then slapped them against the red circles of cold on his freckled cheeks. All talk stopped and I saw all the kids s
