Here, under the guidance of former psychologist Martin Ellis, people come from all walks of life to study - what, exactly? - and leave with their lives deeply changed. Freelance journalist Geoffrey is determined to find out what is going on at Allhallows, and what makes Ellis - and his graduates - tick. But from his first moments in the timeless atmosphere of the Georgian mansion, the garden with its strange sculptures, the mysterious temple and the enigmatic maze, he feels sure that the answers to his questions will not come easily. To reach his goal, he will need a great deal more than theories on magic...

The finger is not the moon, and so too the moon can represent many things. The meaning arising in this moment is that the appearance of the moon is codependent on the sun. Both sun and moon fly about the inky abyss. The sun is the one source of energization in this world. The moon is lit by its light, but it too shines its own unique image out of the dark. "The finger pointing to the moon" is I believe a pointer from the Laughing Buddha Hotei, and it's meant to say that many people when they come to spirituality or awakening revel in the pointers themselves, in clever words and parables, rituals, hierarchy, ashrams, advanced dissertations, and forgetting that it's not about any of that, it's about truth. The moon represents truth. The finger represents everything else. It is like the finger pointing to the moon" said Bruce Lee in Enter the Dragon. Where did this imagery originally come from? It comes from the Shurangama Sutra, a core text for Zen/Chan Buddhist training, where the Buddha wanted to point out where Ananda's real mind (the True Mind) was to him. So in this "Finger to the moon" analogy, the Buddha explained that: Imagine someone is trying to show you the moon by pointing to it: Your True Mind is the Moon (naturally bright, i.e., has enlightenment naturally). The Finger is the Teachings (dark, i.e., lacks enlightenment). The Finger points direct to a project of open questions. It's about the importance of spirituality in life and the danger of fanaticism. It's about social and anthropological issues as well. This website is part of the artistic project and it has two main sections: one is about the artistic project itself, with written texts, video, photos, and other miscellaneous documentation about all the ongoing steps. The other section is The Finger and the Moon blog. The blog is conceived with the purpose of collecting ideas from people working in the same dialogue-oriented directions, with their different perspectives as art. Finger and the Moon is a remarkable work of syncretic aesthetics. That St. Teresa, Bernini, Stein, and Fellini impossibly find a disjunctive synthesis in her performances speaks volumes for the uniqueness and power of her courageous work. Such rational faith in the aesthetic necessity for art to confront religion and its politics could not be achieved by anyone but a saint. Liuba is a new patron saint of a profoundly activist art. » Download full text PDF. The Finger and the Moon #3 by Alessandra Gagliano Candela.
